Shibuya's 'loyal dog Hachiko' (1) vanishes

A team of daring thieves, disguised as a cleaning crew, (2) made off with one of Tokyo's most famous landmarks in the early hours of Saturday.

The statue of "loyal dog Hachiko," a popular meeting spot on the north side of Shibuya Station since 1934, was reported missing shortly after dawn, when a newspaper delivery truck driver spotted the bare pedestal and (3)notified policemen at the nearby "koban."

While police have yet to (4) issue an official statement concerning the statue's disappearance, The Japan Times has learned the entire scene was recorded by NHK's 24-hour monitor camera (5) affixed to the Shibuya Station building.

A network technician described what clearly happened. "Five men in work clothes, wearing hats, safety glasses and face masks, 6 moved in about 1:43 a.m., after the trains had 7 stopped running," said the man, who 8 declined to give his name.

They set up 'Men Working' signs, and then raised several blue vinyl work sheets around the statue. It took them about 10 minutes to get it off the pedestal.

While (9)motives for the theft are uncertain, speculation has focused on the (10)soaring prices for copper and other metals, spurred by the construction boom in China.
